The city of Peking is in two sections, known as the Tatar and Chinese cities. The former, taking its name from the Tatars who conquered northern China in the seventeenth century, is nearly square and is surrounded by a wall which is over 14 miles long. The Chinese city was originally a suburb and was inclosed in walls in the sixteenth century. This is rectangular in shape, the walls somewhat lower than those of the other city and measuring ten miles in length. In the heart of the Tatar city is the inclosure known as the "Forbidden City," the home of the emperor, to which no foreigners are admitted. Around the "Forbidden City," is a large inclosure known to the imperial city, also having high walls and gates. Foreigners are allowed to commissioners for foreign missions by the commissioners in the two sections of the city, representing Buddhism.
